Hindu Nationalism, the Growing Trend in India

By Don Aguiar

The world's biggest democracy, India, is holding elections right now. Voting actually began earlier this month, and it lasts for five weeks. During these elections, we're looking at a big trend in India. As its economy has opened to the world and grown really robustly, so has Hindu pride. Some call it Hindu nationalism. A lifetime after India cast off colonial rule, it is embracing a new identity, and its majority-Hindu faith is a big part of that.

Many would want to know - What is this Hindu nationalism all about and why is it being forced upon on all its people by the present government?

Hinduism is the biggest religion in India. Polytheistic. That means that there are many gods. And it's historically been open to embracing of diversity of traditions. About 80 percent of Indians are Hindus. Now, Hindu nationalism is political. It's the idea that the Hindu faith and culture should shape the state and its policies.

India's future as a secular republic that embraces pluralism, kind of adheres to the founders' notion that India's unity is strengthened by its diversity. And over the past five years, we have seen the rise of a Hindu Nationalist Party and the spread of this kind of nationalist ideology.

And that ideology is often at odds with the secularism that is enshrined in India's constitution, the whole system that India has really had since independence from Britain since 1947.

This is quite a moment in this country. It's been secular for - 70 or so years. Where's this drive to change that coming from?

Let's go back to India's founding - 1947, freedom from the British, India decided to become secular. And here's why. India is so diverse. There are hundreds of languages, ethnic groups, castes and the founding fathers, among them Mahatma Gandhi and Jawaharlal Nehru, believed that really only a pluralist democracy could hold such diversity together. Hindu nationalists, though, were really miffed. They wanted a Hindu state, and they didn't get it. And it was actually a Hindu nationalist who, less than a year later, assassinated Gandhi.

Gandhi's death sort of shut down this whole debate, and secularism took hold. And now, a lifetime later, the debate is opening up. India elected a Hindu nationalist, Prime Minister Modi. Right now, even secular parties are scrambling to brandish their Hindu nationalist cred because it's just so popular with voters.

If India moves farther and farther away from the secular past, and Hindu identity really takes hold even more, India's secular credentials will be lost and will result in implications for its people as religion and communalism will take precedence over development and trade.

India has a prime minister who's a Hindu nationalist or Hindu nationalism is now mainstream. This party's been in power for five years and has changed India as a country and as a culture and have introduced Beef bans, for example. Cows are sacred to Hindus. One can get a hamburger in any Mumbai neighbourhood, but its buffalo meat. Ayurveda is all the rage. That's food, health and beauty products based on ancient Hindu healing traditions and it's a Hindu wellness industry, and it's absolutely booming. The very map of India is changing. Cities and landmarks with Muslim-sounding names - Allahabad, for example, a city in northern India built by Muslim kings in the 16th century, they've changed its name to Prayagraj, a word that refers to a Hindu holy site there.

These people now certainly feel history has not been presented and narrated and understood in the way that it should have been understood. Every nation goes through course correction. And that makes Indian Muslims pretty uncomfortable. This is their heritage. One in 6 Indians is Muslim.

The nationalist say India should become a Hindu homeland in the way Israel is a homeland for Jews worldwide. In fact, Modi's government has introduced a new citizenship amendment bill that would give Indian citizenship to anybody persecuted in neighbouring countries, except if they're Muslim. So India would be using religion as a criteria for citizenship for the first time.

Most observers say Modi will win, and the question is by how much. And that would really determine his mandate to change the country. Prime Minister Narendra Modi is a Hindu nationalist. He belongs to a Hindu nationalist political party, the Bharatiya Janata Party, or BJP. And he spent his formative years working for this group called the RSS. Some members call it, a Hindu version of the Boy Scouts, focusing on values in civic life. But, they also train with weapons and have participated in anti-Muslim riots. Modi is running for a second term, and many see this election as a real turning point for India - this election will determine...

Tanika Sarkar is a historian, retired from Jawaharlal Nehru University in New Delhi, and she says Hindu nationalists have grown these really deep roots into Indian society. They have associations among students, trade unions, and retired army people. They have penetrated the everyday lives of Hindus in a very big way. Whether they win the election or lose the election, this work will go on.

India's still a young country, 72 years old. It's still really working out who it wants to be. And increasingly, Hindu nationalism is going to be a part of the answer to that.

‘A Fool’s Paradise’

I have a reverential regard for Chotebhai for his consistent revanchist stand against Corruption and his urging us to wake up from our disinterest and nonperformance in our daily lives.

However, allow me to mention some salient facts with regards to his views.

Apart from April Fool’s Day, Easter is also a celebration of the vernal Equinox, where we celebrate the New Life of the Resurrection.

Hopefully, as per item 14 of the article, the Papal Nuncio will sort out the issues.

However, as regards Bishop Agnelo Gracias, Apostolic Administrator, i can vouch for his integrity and selflessness.

About a decade ago, our Parish, (St. Anthony Parish, Saki Naka), was struggling for Community Funds. I wrote to Bp. Agnelo Gracias, President of the Archdiocesan Corpus Fund (ACF), suggesting ways of replenishing our Parish Funds.

Bp. Agnelo Gracias unhesitatingly replied that the ACF would supply any money as and when required.

Today, The ACF has a corpus of about Rs.13 crore, and our Parish has a tidy sum of about Rs. 3 lakhs.

Still we can never forget his magnanimous gesture."

Jet airways ... is a Scam!

Old promoters of the company took 8000 cr. loan from SBI.

1800 cr is current outstanding pending. Now old promoters are out of the company. What did they do with 8000 + 1800 = 9800 cr?

SBI took over with all respect including financial liabilities.

Now SBI is selling this company in open market having residual asset of 1000 cr. Offers are coming at 150 Rs. per share. Hence the total equity of 11.37 cr shares X 150 Rs = 1700 cr. Will be collected! Say new owners are buying company at approx. 2000 cr.

Therefore loss of SBI is 8000 + 1800 - 2000 = 7800 cr. 7800 cr loss is taken by SBI the fund came from general public!

Thus neither old owner is in loss nor new owner, even SBI is not directly in loss! Ofcourse, without flying in Jet Airways Indian public loses 7800 cr.!

All case was settled quietly as if there is no scam! no one raised any objection, no one was given the obligation, no one is alleged! The poor Public isn't even aware of this! Jet will fly again in few months chalta hai!

. Will some readers of yours tell me whether my above conclusion is right?

On voting for a secular party

In the recent interview with the 'Times of India', Cardinal Oswald Gracias has recommended that citizens vote for a secular party that upholds the Indian Constitution. The problem lies in identifying such a party, given the thin line that separates the secular from the communal. Our democratic polity is based on the principle of secularism enshrined in the preamble of the Constitution. It rejects religion-based politics. Hence every political party necessarily claims to be secular, although the ground realities are different, and secularism of one party is often branded by the other as 'pseudo-secularism'. Secondly, besides selecting a political party that is secular, it is also necessary to choose upright candidates with a clean image, with no criminal antecedents, and who after being elected will work with his party to provide a corruption-free, secular govt that will uphold the Constitution that provides the freedom to practise one's religion, and recognizes the equality, dignity and the rights of the poor and the marginalised of society. It is therefore left to every voter to exercise his/her constitutional right to vote judiciously and according to one's conscience, keeping in mind also the changing political scenario, where, cases of intolerance, oppression, injustice, extremism, corruption and pseudo-nationalism are on the rise.

Sri Lanka dragged into global conflict with Islamic extremism

By Jehan Perera

Colombo: The sudden deterioration of the security situation in Sri Lanka has come as a shock to its people. Five days after a series of suicide bombings on Easter Sunday killed more than 250 people, injured over 500, wrecked three Christian churches and caused substantial damage to three five-star hotels, Sri Lanka continues to be in a state of siege. A nighttime curfew has been declared and there is vastly reduced traffic on the usually packed Colombo roads.

Rumors of further attacks are spread wildly and widely, forcing the government to ask people only to listen to official police warnings. The little-known National Thowheeth Jama'ath (NTJ), which has been identified as the source of the suicide bombers, has about 150 members. It is feared that many of them might be potential bombers. There is a high-priority security search for them. Until they are all found, the danger of another suicide bombing will remain.

The targeting of churches and hotels on Easter Sunday, and the high level of casualties, has generated massive international media attention. The suicide bombings by Muslims has brought Sri Lanka into the orbit of global Islamic extremism for which it is ill prepared. It is strange and frightening for Sri Lankans to find themselves being dragged into an international conflict they did not think about too much or wanted and over which they have so little control.

Ironically, less than six months ago, the Lonely Planet travel guide ranked Sri Lanka as the number one tourist destination for 2019. For nearly 10 years, since the end of the Sri Lankan civil war in 2009, the country enjoyed a perfect record of zero terrorist attacks. But close on 40 foreign nationals lost their lives in the Easter Sunday bombings for which Islamic State (IS), the internationally known champion of extremist Islam, has claimed responsibility.

Why was Sri Lanka chosen to be an IS target and why did suicide bombers want to give up their lives to attack Christians in a country where Christians are a small minority of about 6 percent of the population?

Christian-Muslim relations in Sri Lanka have, by and large, been cordial and accommodative, even as they join hands in common causes that affect them as minorities. Both Christians and Muslims, who account for 10 percent of the population, have faced a degree of harassment by the majority Buddhists and localized violence at times. But strangely it was Christians who became the targets of Muslim suicide bombers, which has given rise to several conspiracy theories.

Within the Catholic Church, which suffered attacks on two of its churches, there is speculation that they were targeted because of their support given publicly last month to the anti-drugs campaign undertaken by President Maithripala Sirisena as his pet project. Sri Lanka has become a transit point for the international drug trade, and the president's campaign has netted vast quantities of drugs and led to the arrest of dozens of drug dealers, most of whom are Muslim. The loss of income and personnel is believed to have precipitated the attacks by drug syndicates linked to IS.

Another popular explanation for the targeting of Sri Lanka is that it was retaliation for the massacre of Muslims in Christchurch, New Zealand, by an Australian gunman just over a month ago. However, an operation of this scale and coordination would require several months of preparation. The establishment of the NTJ began at least eight years ago in 2011. Sri Lanka presented a soft target for IS infiltration due to the relaxation of national security safeguards in recent years.

In its bid to contain the security threat, the government has brought in emergency regulations that give special powers to security forces. Soldiers who have limited training in dealing with civilians are now going into people's homes in cordon and search operations. There are reports that the military are being tough on Muslims when they enter their homes. This could alienate Muslims and lead more youth to join the ranks of militant organizations. This is a throwback to the three-decade civil war that the Sri Lankan state waged against Tamil rebels when similar search operations led to loudly voiced allegations of human rights violations that further alienated the target populations.

But today, with national security given the highest priority, there will be hardly any objections publicly voiced against the vesting of emergency powers with security forces. Public sentiment is to ensure that the apprehension of terrorists takes place as priority number one. There is much anger among both the Sinhalese and Tamil populations as the Christian victims were from both communities. Threats to Muslim shops and even to individuals are being reported, not in a large-scale way but widespread enough to provide a tipping point into mass violence.

The police are reporting the existence of more suicide bombers and have been finding vehicles parked with bombs inside them. Schools are all closed because they might be targets. There is particular concern for Christian schools due to the targeting of churches in the Easter Sunday bombings. Parcels with bombs are also being found. If another one of them explodes in a crowded area, or in a school, the reaction of people could be unpredictable.

The government failed to heed intelligence reports warning about attacks by Muslim extremists that were given by Indian intelligence. Shocking evidence has surfaced of political leaders failing to cooperate with each other even in the national interest. The prime minister complained that he had not been informed about these warnings. A government minister said he did not go to church on Easter Sunday as he had heard about these reports, but the churches and ordinary citizens were not warned. People are angry about the government's failure to take pre-emptive action.

In the meantime, the opposition is seizing advantage of the situation by accusing the government of ineptitude and weakness. The Christian population who voted overwhelmingly for the government at the last elections may no longer wish to do so. They feel betrayed and abandoned. The main political beneficiary of this tragedy is likely to be the opposition in a year that is likely to end with presidential elections due in November. In a country where conspiracy theories abound, this is a cause for added speculation.

Jehan Perera, executive director of the National Peace Council of Sri Lanka, is a regular political columnist for newspapers both in Sri Lanka and internationally. He holds a doctor of law degree from Harvard Law School and a B.A. in economics from Harvard College.

Bangalore Archbishop seeks politician's apology for insulting Christians

New Delhi: Archbishop Peter Machado of Bangalore has sought an apology from a pro-Hindu politician for describing Christians as dishonest and unpatriotic.

Archbishop Machado, who heads the bishops' council in Karnataka state, said K.S. Eshwarappa, a senior leader of the pro-Hindu Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP), should publicly apologize for his statement.

The politician's "uncalled-for remarks" are "condemnable and highly deplorable," he said in an April 24 statement.

Eshwarappa, a former deputy chief minister of Karnataka, reportedly told media during his election campaign on April 9 that his party intentionally avoided having Christians as BJP candidates.

"The Christians, like the Muslims, were not given party tickets [in the state] because Christians are not loyal to the country and not honest too," Eshwarappa reportedly said.

Archbishop Machado said he delayed making a public statement about the politician's remarks to avoid being misinterpreted and people giving a "political coloring to it."

India's seven-phase parliamentary election began on April 11. Polling in Karnataka was scheduled for the second and third phases and concluded on April 23.

The BJP leader's statement "has done great harm to Christians and discredited their community's credibility," the archbishop said.

The politician should "withdraw his statement and tender an unconditional apology to the Christian community," he added.

The prelate, also president of the ecumenical All Karnataka United Christian Forum for Human Rights, said Eshwarappa's statement has tarnished Christians across the country.

The BJP has fielded candidates in all 543 parliamentary seats, but only four Christians and six Muslims are standing under the BJP banner.

Alphonse Kannamtham and P.C. Thomas are Catholics standing for election in Kerala, a Christian stronghold in southern India. The other two BJP Christian candidates are based in Christian-dominated Meghalaya and Manipur in the northeast.

Of the six Muslim BJP candidates, three are standing in Muslim-dominated Kashmir, while the other three are also in Muslim-majority areas.

Although the BJP ignores Christians in mainstream politics, they "render selfless services in various fields, offering genuine care and concern for all" through their institutions of health and education, Archbishop Machado said.

"Also, it is a well-known reality that many Christians have laid down their lives for the country and at present thousands of Christians serve" the defense forces "with utmost devotion and dedication," he added.

The archbishop said Christians are proud Indian citizens and cherish a patriotic spirit that they promote at all levels.

Hundreds of Christians gathered in Bengaluru on April 13 to protest about the BJP leader's controversial statement.

"No one can point a finger at Christians when it comes to honesty, integrity and patriotism," said Harry D'Souza, president of Karnataka Christian Social Welfare Association.

D'Souza told ucanews.com on April 25 that the association will file a defamation suit against the politician if he fails to apologize.

Christians number only about one million or 1.8 percent of Karnataka's 61 million people, of whom 84 percent are Hindus. The state's Christian presence is less than the national average of 2.3 percent.

WHETHER OUR NATION IS IN DANGER OF BECOMING A FASCIST STATE?

by Eric D'Sa

Well, it's a bit difficult to say, because we've forgotten what fascism is. People now use the term "fascist" as a kind of general-purpose abuse. Or they confuse fascism with nationalism. So let's take a few minutes to clarify what fascism actually is, and how it is different from nationalism. The milder forms of nationalism have been among the most benevolent of human creations. Nations are communities of millions of strangers who don't really know each other. For example, in our own country we don't know except for a few, the more than 130 million people who share our citizenship. But thanks to nationalism, we can all partly care about one another and cooperate effectively.

This is very good. Some people, like the great singer John Lennon, imagine that without nationalism, the world will be a peaceful paradise. But far more likely, without nationalism, we would have been living in tribal chaos as we ourselves did not too long ago. If you look today at the most prosperous and peaceful countries in the world, countries like Sweden and Switzerland and Japan, you will see that they have a very strong sense of nationalism. In contrast, countries that lack a strong sense of nationalism, like Congo and Somalia and Afghanistan, tend to be violent and poor. Loyalty is more to their individual tribes.

So what is fascism, and how is it different from nationalism? Well, nationalism tells me that my nation is unique, and that I have special obligations towards my nation. Fascism, in contrast, tells me that my nation is supreme, and that I have exclusive obligations towards it. I don't need to care about anybody or anything other than my nation. Usually, of course, people have many identities and loyalties to different groups. For example, I can be a good patriot, loyal to my country, and at the same time, be loyal to my family, my neighborhood, my profession, my city, my state, humankind as a whole, truth and beauty. Of course, when I have different identities and loyalties, it sometimes creates conflicts and complications. But, well, who ever told you that life was easy? Life is complicated. We have to deal with it.

Fascism is what happens when people try to ignore the complications and to make life too easy for themselves. Fascism denies all identities except the national identity and insists that I have obligations only towards my nation. If my nation demands that I sacrifice my family, then I will sacrifice my family. If the nation demands that I kill millions of people, then I will kill millions of people. And if my nation demands that I betray truth and beauty, then I should betray truth and beauty. For example, how does a fascist evaluate art? How does a fascist decide whether a movie is a good movie or a bad movie? Well, it's very, very, very simple. There is really just one yardstick: if the movie serves the interests of the nation, it's a good movie; if the movie doesn't serve the interests of the nation, it's a bad movie. That's it. Similarly, how does a fascist decide what to teach kids in school? Again, it's very simple. There is just one yardstick: you teach the kids whatever serves the interests of the nation. The truth doesn't matter at all.

Now, the horrors of the Second World War and of the Holocaust remind us of the terrible consequences of this way of thinking. But usually, when we talk about the ills of fascism, we do so in an ineffective way, because we tend to depict fascism as a hideous monster, without really explaining what was so seductive about it. It's a bit like these Hollywood or Bollywood movies that depict the bad guys as ugly and mean and cruel. They're cruel even to their own supporters. When I see these movies, I never understand -- why would anybody be tempted to follow a disgusting creep? The problem with evil is that in real life, evil doesn't necessarily look ugly. It can look very beautiful. This is something that Christianity knew very well, which is why in Christian art, as opposed to the movies of Hollywood and Bollywood, Satan is usually depicted as a gorgeous hunk. This is why it's so difficult to resist the temptations of Satan, and why it is also difficult to resist the temptations of fascism.

Fascism makes people see themselves as belonging to the most beautiful and most important thing in the world -- the nation. And then people think, "Well, they taught us that fascism is ugly. But when I look in the mirror, I see something very beautiful, so I can't be a fascist, right?" Wrong. That's the problem with fascism. When you look in the fascist mirror, you see yourself as far more beautiful than you really are. In the 1930s, when Germans looked in the fascist mirror, they saw Germany as the most beautiful thing in the world. If today, Russians look in the fascist mirror, they will see Russia as the most beautiful thing in the world. And if Israelis look in the fascist mirror, they will see Israel as the most beautiful thing in the world. This does not mean that we are now facing a rerun of the 1930s.

Fascism and dictatorships might come back, but they will come back in a new form, a form which is much more relevant to the new technological realities of the 21st century. In ancient times, land was the most important asset in the world. Politics, therefore, was the struggle to control land. And dictatorship meant that all the land was owned by a single ruler or by a king or Maharaja. And in the modern age, machines and the company's that owed them became more important than land. Politics became the struggle to control the companies and their machines. And dictatorship meant that too many of the companies and machines became concentrated in the hands of the government or of a small elite. Nationalising companies such as banks, oil companies, major manufacturing, transportation companies served this purpose. We were made to believe we the people controlled these public sector units through our elected governments. We as a nation are struggling to get over this problem.

Now data is replacing both land and machines as the most important asset. Politics becomes the struggle to control the flows of data. And dictatorship now means that too much data is being concentrated in the hands of the government or of a small elite who can be controlled by the government. The greatest danger that now faces liberal democracy is that the revolution in information technology will make dictatorships more efficient than democracies. In the 20th century, democracy and capitalism defeated fascism and communism because democracy was better at processing data and making decisions. Given 20th-century technology, it was simply inefficient to try and concentrate too much data and too much power in one place.

But it is not a law of nature that centralized data processing is always less efficient than distributed data processing. With the rise of artificial intelligence and machine learning, it might become feasible to process enormous amounts of information very efficiently in one place, to take all the decisions in one place, and then centralized data processing will be more efficient than distributed data processing. And then the main handicap of authoritarian regimes in the 20th century -- their attempt to concentrate all the information in one place -- it will become their greatest advantage.

Another technological danger that threatens the future of democracy is the merger of information technology with biotechnology, which might result in the creation of algorithms that know me better than I know myself. And once you have such algorithms, an external system, like the government, cannot just predict my decisions, it can also manipulate my feelings, my emotions. A dictator may not be able to provide me with good health care or education, but he will be able to make me love him and to make me hate the opposition. Democracy will find it difficult to survive such a development because, in the end, democracy is not based on human rationality; it's based on human feelings. During elections and referendums, you're not being asked, "What do you think?" You're actually being asked, "How do you feel?" And if somebody can manipulate your emotions effectively, democracy will become an emotional puppet show.

So what can we do to prevent the return of fascism and the rise of new dictatorships? The number one question that we face is: Who controls the data? If you are an engineer, then find ways to prevent too much data from being concentrated in too few hands. And find ways to make sure the distributed data processing is at least as efficient as centralized data processing. This will be the best safeguard for democracy. As for the rest of us who are not engineers, the number one question facing us is how not to allow ourselves to be manipulated by those who control the data.

The enemies of liberal democracy, they have a method. They hack our feelings. Not our emails, not our bank accounts -- they hack our feelings of fear and hate and vanity, and then use these feelings to polarize and destroy democracy from within. This is actually a method that Silicon Valley pioneered in order to sell us products. But now, the enemies of democracy are using this very method to sell us fear and hate and vanity. They cannot create these feelings out of nothing. So they get to know our own preexisting weaknesses. And then use them against us. And it is therefore the responsibility of all of us to get to know our weaknesses and make sure that they do not become a weapon in the hands of the enemies of democracy.

Getting to know our own weaknesses will also help us to avoid the trap of the fascist mirror. As we explained earlier, fascism exploits our vanity. It makes us see ourselves as far more beautiful than we really are. This is the seduction. But if you really know yourself, you will not fall for this kind of flattery. If somebody puts a mirror in front of your eyes that hides all your ugly bits and makes you see yourself as far more beautiful and far more important than you really are, just break that mirror. You the citizens will have to decide whether for a nation like ourselves with so many illiterate and semi illiterates, it will be easy to be seduced by the the facist mirror?†

That is a smart wife

A Wife's Poem

*He didn't like the curry
And he didn't like my cake.
He said my biscuits were too hard...
Not like his mother used to make.
I didn't prepare the coffee right
He didn't like the stew,
I didn't mend his socks
The way his mother used to do
I pondered for an answer
I was looking for a clue.
Isn't there anything I could do
To match his mother's shoe?
Then I smiled as I saw light
One thing I could definitely do
I turned around
And slapped him tight....
Like his mother used to do.*

The guardian angel

Walking down the street, a man hears a voice" "Stop! If you take one more step, a brick will fall down and kill you. "The man stopped; a big brick fell in front of him. The astonished man continued walking to the cross walk. The voice shouted, "Stop! If you take one more step, a car will run over you and you will die." The man stood still; a car came careening around the corner, barely missing him. "Where are you? the man asked. "Who are you?" "I am your guardian angel," the voice answered. "Oh yeah?" the man asked. "Where the hell were you when I got married last week?"

Anger vs Love

A college student wanted to sit next to one of his teachers at lunch. However, the teacher looked at the student with an arrogant face and said: 'A swan shan't be friends with a pig.' "Then I shall fly on," answered the student with a smile. The teacher was clearly angry by the cheeky reply and decided to make sure to do everything in his power to fail the student has amazing answers for everything. Therefore, hoping he could still fail his victim, the teacher asked him a trickier question: 'You're walking on a road and you find two bags. One contains gold, the other cleverness. Which bag do you choose?' "The gold." 'Unfortunately, I don't agree. I'd choose cleverness because that's more important than money.' 'Everyone would choose what they don't have,' says the student. The teacher turns red and he's so angry he writes 'idiot' on the student's paper. The student leaves without looking at the paper. However, he returns shortly. gives back his paper and says: 'Excuse me sir, you signed my paper but you forgot to give me my grade!'

Inside story is different

A man consulted his priest about getting a divorce. The priest was surprised. "Why on earth would you want to divorce such a lovely wife? She is soft and gentle and if I may say so, she is also quite beautiful and nicely proportioned. I really can't see what you have to complain about." The man took off his shoe. "See this shoe," he said, showing it to the priest, "The leather is soft and gentle. It is a beautiful piece of work and nicely proportioned." "Ah" said the priest, "a parable." "In a way, Father," replied the man. "I'm the only one who knows it pinches."

When I drink, you eat

A policeman pulls a man over for speeding and asks him to get out of the car. After looking the man over he says, "Sir, I couldn't help but notice your eyes are blood-shot. Have you been drinking?" The man gets really indignant and says, "Officer, I couldn't help but notice your eyes are glazed. Have you been eating doughnuts?"

Use ATM

An old guy was working out in the gym when he spotted a sweet young thing. He asked the trainer who was nearby, "What machine in here should I use to impress that sweet thing over there?" The trainer looked him up and down and said, "I think you should try the ATM in the lobby."

Commissioner Of Police Meets With Leaders Of Christian Churches On Security Measures

The meeting was convened by Dr. Abraham Mathai, former Vice Chairman, State Minorities Commission.

At a meeting held at Archbishop's House, on Saturday, April 27, 2019, between representatives of various Churches in the Christian Community and the Mumbai Police, the Commissioner of Police, Mr. Sanjay Barve, highlighted the need for enhanced security measures, particularly in the wake of recent terrorist attacks on Churches in Sri Lanka. The ways and means of ensuring the best possible safety measures were enumerated and explained, which also involved the use of technology such as CCTV and scanners. # What kind of anger do you have?

ANGER IS A universal emotion. We all feel annoyed, frustrated or outraged from time to time. Let's face it, we all carry rage inside us. It's the result of living in these stressful times. Whether it's the long lines, the long traffic jams, people being rude or someone who is especially annoying you. But people differ in the kind of anger they have. Some have a slow building, cold anger, while others immediately ignite in a furious rage. Here are few common anger profiles, as well as tips for managing your feelings of hostility.

Fed up? Frustrated? Irritated? Whatever you call it, we've all felt it. Anger may be an unpleasant emotion to deal with but it's a normal, healthy part of being human. If you express it in a healthy way, anger serves as a powerful motivating force. But chronic anger can increase your heart-attack and stroke risk. Before you can address your anger issues, it helps to first determine your anger type. Although there's no consensus amongst psychologists as to how many types of anger exist, below are the most common types of anger. We recommend pursuing the list to see if you can identify the ways you most commonly react in anger. Clarifying your anger type - and learning simple strategies to manage that type of anger - is the key to controlling your emotions and behaviour.

Chronic anger :

Chronic anger is an ongoing, generalised resentment of other people, frustration with certain circumstances and anger towards oneself. It's characterised by habitual irritation: the prolonged nature of this type of anger can have profoundly adverse effects on one's health and wellbeing.

Management mantra : Spend some time reflecting on the underlying causes of your anger. If you can identify the source of your resentment, you may be able to resolve the inner conflict you're experiencing by forgiving yourself and others for past transgressions. The process of forgiveness is powerful and can help to resolve lingering hurt and frustration.

Volatile anger :

Volatile anger seems to come out of nowhere: if this is your type of anger, you are very quick to get upset about perceived annoyances, both big and small. Once you've impulsively expressed your anger, you often calm down just as quickly. Unfortunately volatile anger can be incredibly destructive, as those around you may feel they need to walk on eggshells for fear of triggering your rage. If left unchecked, volatile anger may eventually lead to violent outbursts.

Management mantra :

Identify the signs and physical symptoms that precede a volatile outburst and use relaxation techniques (such as deep breathing) to stop your anger from escalating.

Assertive anger :

Assertive anger is the most constructive type of anger expression. If this is your type of anger, you use feelings of frustration or rage as a catalyst for positive change. Rather than avoiding confrontation, internalising anger or resorting to verbal insults and physical outbursts, you express your anger in ways that create change in the world around you - without causing distress or destruction.

Management mantra : Assertive anger is a powerful motivator. Use assertive anger to overcome fear, address injustice and achieve your desired outcomes in life.

Behavioural anger :

Behavioural anger is expressed physically and is usually aggressive. If you've experienced this type of anger, you may feel so overwhelmed by your emotions that you lash out at the object of your rage. This might involve physically attacking someone or breaking or throwing things. This type of anger can be highly unpredictable and often has negative legal and interpersonal consequences.

Management mantra : If you feel your anger rising, take a moment to calm down before you do something you may regret. Remove yourself from the situation if possible and use a self-talk technique to regain control of your emotions.

Verbal anger :

Verbal anger is often seen as less dangerous than behavioural anger but it can be a form of emotional and psychological abuse that deeply hurts the target of one's anger. Verbal abuse may be expressed as furious shouting, threats, ridicule, sarcasm, intense blaming or criticism. If you've lashed out at someone verbally it's common to feel ashamed, apologetic and regretful afterwards.

Management mantra : Even if the words are on the tip of your tongue, take a breath before you speak. Then another one. As tempting as it may be to blurt out the first angry response that comes to mind when you're upset, the key to effectively managing this type of anger is simply delaying the impulse to lash out. With practice, you can curb any tendency towards verbal abuse.

Self-abusive anger :

Self-abusive anger is a shame-based type of anger. If you've been feeling hopeless, unworthy, humiliated or ashamed, you might internalise those feelings and express anger via negative self talk, self-harm, substance use or eating disordered behaviour. Alternatively, you may find yourself lashing out at those around to mask feelings of low self-worth, increasing your sense of alienation.

Management mantra : Mindfulness meditation can also help centre you in

Create your happy - life list!

WE ALL KNOW that list making creates order in life- but did you know it can create a lot of happiness as well? Yet whether they are conventional (go to school, exercise more, eat healthy) or focused on emotional goals (make peace with a sibling, reach out often to grandparents), life lists typically have one thing in common: They're meant to help us clarify our values so we can get the life we want. So, if you need to uplift some happiness quotient and sort out life all the more then try making the lists we have compiled here

In order to thrive, a person needs opportunities, family support, challenges and difficulties at manageable level, calm environment and a high degree of autonomy. Well in order to thrive one does not need all the components but a combination of some from the list. Lists are something that some of us manage in an orderly and meticulous manner but many of us treat them as an additional task or forget them very quickly. Whether you belong to the first or second group, there are a number of lists that you will undoubtedly want to keep and some of them you probably already keep in your head. The following lists the present moment and deal with any impulses to engage in self-harming behaviours.

SO, WHAT CAN YOU DO ABOUT ANGER?

- Learn when and how to walk away from a potentially bad situation. Remember, you could do more harm than good if you choose to remain in your current situation.
- Taking ownership and feeling in control can make a world of difference. If you choose to own your emotions, no one can control you. In fact, you start to gain better control over your own thought process.
- You need to learn that you can only control the here and now. Keeping your emotions in the present state is paramount when you are involved with people who have wronged you in the past. You need to stop this if you are ever going to move on.

will help you manage the day correctly, finish projects that you manage the day correctly, finish projects that you haven't been able to get to and fill your free time in a way that will bring you great joy. Whatever you choose, as long as you persist in it, they will help you achieve the things that are important to you and will contribute to your happiness!

The 10-minute list :

We all complain that we don't have time but in reality, every time we have 10 minutes to spare we spend them trying to remember what it is we need to do. In the following list, you can include all the quick tasks you never have the time for and do them when you have an 'extra ten minutes'. These tasks include, for instance, cleaning up your computer files, dusting your living room shelves, sorting the laundry and so on. These little things accumulate over time and the 10-minute list will help you do them gradually throughout the week and not get stuck with a pile of these short yet time-consuming tasks.

List of new things to try :

The list of new things you want to try can include everything from a new recipe you've heard about but you haven't had time to try, a new and interesting class you'd like to take or even a very challenging knitting guide . Just preparing the list will motivate you to try new things and on days when you feel frustrated or stuck in a certain task, you can take a few minutes to pick a particular item from the list and stimulate your creativity and mood.

List of priorities :

The list of priorities will include our major goals in life and help us decide which one to spend time on and when. If you could look at your list five years from now, what would you hope to complete and erase off of it? These are the things you have to devote your time to now.

Plan of action list :

Define your main goal, break it down into several smaller goals and steps, and then, try to estimate how much time you'll need to reach each smaller goal. Decide what you can do to get on your way to your first stop and start pushing yourself forward! You may also find that your current job does not allow you to move even one step forward. If this is the case, you may want to consider other jobs for growth.

List of people to connect to :

If you work in a large company, you may know only a small number of people within it, leading you to missed opportunities and not hearing about positions that may suit your abilities. Make a list of the people you think you should get to know in your company and try to make coffee dates with them. Other people you can add to the list are parents of children in your children's school you would like to meet and neighbours you've not yet had a chance to introduce yourself to.

Weekly list of questions :

Many times, we may feel stuck in the same place and find it difficult to get inspiration that will help us move on. The following list, which can also be done once a month, allows you to recall all your achievements, difficulties you've been able to overcome, as well as your goals for the coming week and things you can do to help you get through them.

A 'THANKFUL LIST'

When we feel happy and satisfied, it is easy for us to find positive things in our lives that we are grateful for. On the other hand, it is precisely during difficult times that we may feel that certain areas of our lives are gray and bleak. When you're at your happiest, write up a list of all the things you're grateful for and when you're having a bad day, pull it out and read it over.

Prayer & Thanksgiving Prayer to the Sacred Heart

Oh Lord Jesus Christ, to Your most Sacred Heart I confide this intention (your request). Only look upon me, then do what your love inspires. Let your Sacred Heart decide ... I count on You ... I trust in You ... I throw myself on your mercy. Lord Jesus, You will not fail me.

Sacred Heart of Jesus, I trust in you.
Sacred Heart of Jesus, I believe in your love for me.
Sacred Heart of Jesus, Your kingdom come.

Sacred Heart of Jesus, I have asked you for many favors, but I earnestly implore this one. Take it, place it in your open Heart. When the Eternal Father looks upon it, he will see it covered with your Precious Blood. It will be no longer my prayer, but yours, Jesus. Sacred Heart of Jesus. I place all my trust in You, Let me not be disappointed. Amen.

Areas in your marriage you shouldn't compromise

A SUCCESSFUL MARRIAGE is a fluid partnership that requires making long and short - term decisions together as a team but there are certain values you shouldn't compromise on

No two people think exactly alike on everything, that means that negotiation and positive compromise are imperative within a solid union. Such as, you might think your son should focus solely on sports as an outside interest, while your wife wants to balance sports with artistic endeavours like learning an instrument. A negotiated compromise is needed. However there are key areas within a marriage when compromising would lead to negative results and we need to stand firm to our beliefs. Let's take a look at three of those critical times.

Core values :

This is the very essence of who you are as a person. Your sense of right wrong, decency and fairness. If you're a person of faith, those core values are anchored to the foundation of a higher power and aren't in your power to change. Going along would have compromised her entire belief structure. We learned from and greatly admired her unwillingness to bend to me, and her strength enabled me to better myself as a man. To lead a family, we have to be rock solid at our core.

Our self-worth :

Marriage is complicated in that there are times when one has to take a backseat to the other in order for the bigger picture to be successfully fulfilled. That type of positive compromise should never be allowed to diminish the self-worth of the person putting themselves second for the betterment of their family. Next to cheating and money woes, this is the area where many marriages hit the skids. We understand this better than most men because my wife is a highly successful businesswoman. It would have not only been cruel of me to stand in the way of her hard work and destiny, but we would have been a fool to allow pride to keep our family from the blessings her talent has given. It has all worked out as beautifully as we could have ever dreamed. Believe in yourself and believe in each other.

Life goals and dreams :

These are the things that truly matter to us individually and as couples. Partners should be completely supportive if each other in this regard and fully onboard with progressing those goals of the marriage. Successful outcomes require planning, commitment and sacrifice. We did not compromise to appease the other but instead pooled our talents to achieve the best possible outcomes. Still to come are the goals and dreams we have for our later years, and to those, there will be no compromising.

NUMBERS: A DIVINE GIFT FROM GOD

Lal Bahadur Shastri and the No. 1

The science of numerology has always fascinated people down the years as a possible secret guide to the secrets of life. In my Bible studies and research done in the field of psychic phenomenon, the repeated appearance of numbers amazed me.

I often read the Book of Numbers in the Bible, in which it records the start and ends with a census of the Israelites. There is so much to understand between the lines of this remarkable work in detailed documentation.

I can never forget what Pythagoras stated, 'Nature geometrizes'. As for the famous psychologist Jung, he said, "Numbers, instead of being the product of invention were found or discovered." At this point it would be interesting to note what Alexander Pope, the English poet wrote: "As yet a child, nor yet a fool to fame/ I lisped in numbers, for the numbers came."

The science of numbers has a deliciously universal appeal. Many buffs of the ancient science are obsessed over the mystical application of numbers when they predominate in the lives of personalities and the lives of lesser known individuals.

The ashes of the late Prime Minister Lal Bahadur Shastri have long settled somewhere in the bosom of the sacred Ganges. The echo, however, has been left to hound the hearts of peace-loving men the world over. Not many being aware of the number One in the life of this great leader.

Shastri was born on 2nd October 1904, at Benaras. The month October is the 10th month, and since the zero is always deleted, we get 1.

His name Lal Bahadur had 10 letters. A strong and beloved name which cannot be forgotten was hitched again to the number 1.

As a young man who rose from a common village lad to become Prime Minister of India, he had to start early in politics. He did, at the age of 19, that is 1 plus 9 which equals 19, once more the number 1.

Anyone interested in the business of government service affecting our leaders in their continual change of duties, will readily agree that Mr. Shastri in his political career held 10 positions in the various government offices. Here again appears the number 1.

Then came his big moment in 1964-Nehru had passed on and the yoke of India hung in the balance.

Who would bear this tremendous burden? Who else but the man of iron and steel nerves, Shastri himself.

The Congress Party's consensus on succession for the Prime Minister's seat was decided in Lal Bahadur Shastri's favour in the month of June, but, on the first of the month. Another Time was running out fast, and for anyone wanting to know the whereabouts of Mr. Shastri, there was always his home at Janpath – the number of the house? But of course, 10 Janpath Street. No. 1.

Nineteen months later as Prime Minister (here again 10) fate took an eloquent entrance into the other world by taking with him the brave little soul of our Prime Minister. Death too kept his bargain with the spirit of numbers, coming in January, the first calendar month, and on the 10th day (1) ,but not for the last time.

The world was shocked to hear of the sudden death of Prime Minister Shastri. He had expired at 1 a.m.

Mr. Shastri was in his early sixties. To be exact 61.

Preparations for his last journey got under way; a special area near Shantivan had been arranged for the solemn cremation. The entire route from 10 Janpath to the cremation grounds was 10 miles. The Final number 1 in the life of Shastri had left the earth.

God Created Science To Challenge Man's Intelligence

By Melvyn Brown

In recent years, the speed to advance in the science of technology development and electronic growth is incredible to observe. Science, covering all other fields of betterment has given man the power to imagine, often with pride that his achievements so far in industry and space research should be credited exclusively to his intelligence. True. And he is well rewarded.

Christians have a common profession of faith in Jesus Christ, Son of God, and the will to obey the Gospel. Man has always been on a quest to learn, to know, to make efforts big and small to solve the problems of industry, on the domestic front and to make life easier.

There is a most unique plan in the act of creation. Men invent abstract mathematics, yet maths turns out with its own wonder to describe the world.

It was Copernicus who concluded that the earth revolves around the sun (1543) – this idea challenged man's view of being at the center of the universe.

I grew up with the nagging thought of an expanding universe which I was told is over 15 billion years old, if not more. The mystery of our existence may never be explained in this lifetime. Yet, science will go on reasoning and contradicting itself: not forgetting the 'Big Bang' cosmology, or the 'chaos' theory.

It is obvious that a greater power is at work and knows best how to go about things.

One bright morning my daughter returned home from work and asked me if I supported the idea of science and God on the subject of creation and evolution. What could I say?

I tried to reply with a few persuasive remarks. Nothing I said was soul-satisfying to my grown up girl.

"Science knows the truth, dad," she blurted, adding, "and God let science major into its theory of evolution." She smiled.

I imagined it was a truly brilliant way of putting it. Here was a character trait of my daughter I had admired – she was never skeptical about the ineffable presence of God in the world, and somehow knew at her early years that scientists were mixing what they discovered from natural science into the formation of "doctrinal beliefs".

Michael Shermer of the Sceptics Society had put it very simply: "Science is a method, not a body of knowledge".

We have since realized that the methods of science are helping to prove the Letters of Christian scripture.

When Jesus said he was divine and human at the same time, it was difficult to understand as a concept. This duality, says science has a parallel in quantum physics. Light, considered a wave in some experiments acts like a "barrage of particles". This situation makes light both wave and particle simultaneously.

The physicist F. Russell Standard said: "Jesus was fully both". God in human guise or truly human acting divine. The future of the faithful will be believers in quantum mechanics I imagine.

When Ram shot an arrow and wiped out Ceylon – it could be true, not a myth. Ram might have attached a micro-atomic bomb (or some nuclear warhead) to the tip of his arrow. Nuclear science might have been child's play at that time.

Buddhists feel that nature is an illusion and ignore it. Muslim scholars left the understanding of physics to the will of Allah.

God created science. The "celestial mechanics" are making belief in God intelligible.

Indian Scientists-Big Step in Predicting Weather!

The sun is the brightest object in the sky, and has been studied by scientists for hundreds of years. However, it still hosts several mysteries even today; for example, when and how powerful explosions take place, such as solar flares! These can potentially affect communications, power supply, GPS navigation, etc.

It was announced on 15 April 2019, that a team of space researchers led by Dr. Divya Oberoi at NCRA, along with Atul Mohan and Surajit Mondal, have made significant advances by making the deepest ever images of the sun at radio wavelengths!

The radio data was acquired through the radio telescope, Murchison Wide-field Array (MWA) in Australia, where Dr. Divya was involved since its inception. She along with others, developed an indigenous software package, Automated Imaging Routine for Compact Array for Radio Sun (AIRCARS).

AIRCARS can help in understanding and in predicting the 'space weather' better and faster than previously possible. In an independent project using AIRCARS, the team generated much higher contrast images of the Sun, at hundreds of closely spaced frequencies at every half-a-second, totaling about a million images per hour! These studies will appear in the April issue of the prestigious Astrophysical Journal of the American Astronomical Society.

The Book of Leviticus, whose key thought is holiness and obedience, promises a salubrious climate and abundant harvest! "If you follow My statutes and keep My commandments and obey them faithfully, I will give you seasonal rains; and the land shall yield its produce, and the trees shall bear their fruit" (Leviticus 26:3-4).

—Dr. Hazel Colaso, Memphis, TN. USA.

Your actions outside work determine your success

PUNCHING IN AT nine and punching out at five is just not enough! Being a rock star at your job is as much a product of the work you do outside the office as the work you do in it. Successful employees know how to actively set themselves up to achieve their career goals while simultaneously benefiting their long-term personal health and mental well-being. The best employees don't wait for companies to set the terms of their work-life balance. They grab it themselves by routinely enriching their experiences beyond their job. No matter your position within a company's hierarchy, you can follow in the footsteps of leaders and achievers by practicing their habits of success

As painful and difficult as it sounds, your hustle shouldn't stop when you punch out of work. Whether you like your job or not, you need to continue your hustle after hours if you are committed to making an impact. It's your off-hours lifestyle that determines your success during your business hours. Yes, it sounds easy to throw in the towel after a draining day at work. But if you're committed to success, it's your post-five pm grind that will make you a future leader. Here are keys for you to spend your downtime efficiently, in order to achieve great things in life:

Tap into creativity :

Leisure pursuits that tap into creativity, such as playing a musical instrument, listening to their latest musical download or attending a concert are all popular pursuits for successful people. Similarly, painting or writing a blog on a topic of passion supports a desire to be innovative and expressive. Recent research out of San Francisco State University shows that people who engage in creative activities outside of work feel more relaxed and in control in their off hours and are more likely to be helpful to coworkers and creative in their approach solving work problems than those without these hobbies.

Creative vs consuming :

We browse Instagram and Facebook for entertainment and escapism. Be selective in the content you consume and use it to educate yourself. Instead of scrolling through your News Feed, read books on the Kindle App. Keep educating yourself self during commute, on elevators, in the doctor's waiting room and so on. Fuel your creativity, generate ideas and find inspiration. There's nothing wrong with consuming content but you should shift the weight in creation's favour. Create more than you consume. By doing this you'll become a better person, better in business - improve your ability to communicate, priorities and develop relationships.

Learn new skills :

The workplace is constantly changing. Jobs are being outsourced or replaced by robots. Simple tasks are being automated by software. The question is - how are you using changes in technology and the workplace to improve your stock? Employees are required to wear several hats and this is going to require people to learn new skills. Thankfully, technology is making it easier to learn technology. There is no excuse not to increase your value, it just requires a trade-off of your time.

Focus on your health :

Mind, body, soul and relationships. What are you doing to fuel your mind? Are you exercising and eating healthy food to keep your body in optimal shape? Do you have a spiritual practice to keep you centred? Are you spending time with loved ones? After all, taking care of yourself is the most important thing you can do to keep you on your game during work hours. Incorporate off-hour practices into your work life. The two practices you must look to implement are mid-morning meditations (three minutes at your desk) and an afternoon walk (10 to 15 minutes). This way, in the midst of a chaotic work day, you can take a few moments to ground yourself, then re-engage into work.

Take advantage of the morning :

Not everyone is naturally primed to be the early bird who gets the worm. But those who do take advantage of the early morning hours to cross off their most daunting tasks or get their blood flowing often create momentum for a productive day. Some people find a sense of accomplishment in running a couple kilometers, others derive energy from a powerful sunrise yoga session. If you're not the active type in the waking hours, consider simply making your bed every morning; you may be among the 71 percent of regular bed-makers who report being happy in life, satisfied at their job and more likely to feel well-rested.

Reflect on personal and professional success :

Successful people are often fascinated with how other young, mega entrepreneurs in technology have made it and the role of innovation. In their downtime, they ponder how that career trajectory could apply to them, not because material wealth will give them fancier homes and cars per se but because they want to make a difference and seek career freedom, which financial reward provides. Successful people are passionate about their pursuits - both at work and play.

The Priesthood – A Path To Holiness

By Fr (Dr) Emmanuel Manuel Kadankavil

Book Reviewed by Ladislaus Louis D'Souza

A Catholic priest “must be an enthusiastic and passionate performer of his responsibilities and must own an accurate and comprehensive package of priestly holiness. He makes an accurate and perfect blend between his blessed ministry and the duty of one's own sanctification. He keeps himself safe from the extremes of over-activity and total withdrawal,” both of which “can be equally detrimental to spiritual growth and can result in the deterioration of interior virtues. He keeps guard against living only for himself. He is not closed in a false quietism, forgetting that a thirst for souls must be his priority...One of the most noted dimensions in the life of a priest would be that people identify in him the true servant of God” (p 31). That in a nutshell is what the individual called to the priesthood could be expected to aspire to. Yet, as every priest, irrespective of his personal level of holiness, would probably testify, this is no easy ideal. Fr [Dr] Emmanuel Manuel Kadankavil, the author of this highly inspiring and uplifting book, sure knows his onions! Indeed, THE PRIESTHOOD—A PATH TO HOLINESS [ST PAULS – ISBN 978-93-5015-342-0 – pp 238 – Rs 250] is concrete fruit of his personal effort at living up to the significance of the priesthood.

A priest is considered a great consolation for the people of God, everywhere. The contents of this book stem from the Silver Jubilarian-author's personal conviction as to both and the graces and the travails associated with the priestly vocation. As such, on the one hand it lucidly brings out the fact that this 'call' essentially includes a call to holiness, challenging the respondent to assiduously strive to achieve the cherished goal; on the other, it attempts to make sense of the holiness a priest is called to pursue, a holiness that results from a concerted effort on the part of priest and faithful alike. Simply put, a priest must be nothing less than holy, such concerted effort on the part of priest and people ensuring the defeat of the hungry wolves baying for the blood of the priest and for that of his flock.

Mar Thomas Elavanal, in his Foreword to the book opines that the holy priesthood of Christ which is transmitted as a gratuitous gift to every priest and which, with the Church herself, is constantly facing new situations arising from various threats and challenges, does need serious consideration today by way of careful assessment and analysis (p 23). THE PRIESTHOOD—A PATH TO HOLINESS is a book that fulfils this purpose so well that the Eparch of Kalyan joyfully recommends it's reading to all priests, both diocesan and religious. Further, Bishop Paul Chittillapilly sees the contents as giving priests “a new insight that makes for a salutary vision in terms of experiencing once again the intensity of Divine love” (p 27).

It follows that, given the crisis situation concerning priestly vocations, the very nature of the Catholic priesthood being of profound significance, Catholics in general, whether clerical, religious or lay, and whether of Latin, Syro-Malabar or Syro-Malankara rite, need to so understand the Catholic priesthood as to learn to appreciate it better and promote it with verve. The contents of THE PRIESTHOOD—A PATH TO HOLINESS are so simple in narrative and yet so rich in nuance, as to be deserving of a thorough read by every Catholic!

Practice hobbies :

Successful people recognise that this is the perfect time to unwind with their favourite pastimes or hobbies, such as socialising, reading, painting or something else.

SPEND TIME WITH HIGHLY-SUCCESSFUL CO-WORKERS

Office socialisation is vital to the health of workplace culture. It doesn't need to be limited to quick chats about last night's game around the coffee machine, either. Natural bonds form between co-workers all the time - being in closed quarters for eight - plus hours a day will tend to do that. Those bonds can strengthen by spending quality time after hours with work peers, building trust and camaraderie that can carry momentum back into the office. Seeing fellow employees in a fresh light away from their desks just might give you a new appreciation for your shared roles in shaping your company's vision.

Thanksgiving

May the Sacred Heart of Jesus be Praised Adored, Glorified and Loved today and everyday throughout the world, now and forever.Amen!!

Ask St. Clare for three favours two impossible and say nine Hail Marys and the above prayer for 9 days with a lighted candle and publish on the 9th day your request will be granted no matter how impossible it is
