Brexit and Its Consequences

by Don Aguiar

FIRST came economic and political turmoil. Now, inevitably, come the lawyers.

Before the vote, European corporate leaders gave surprisingly little thought to what a split might mean for them. Matthias Wissmann, head of VDA, a German car lobby, says car firms made "no contingency plans" and the result caught them unaware despite Germany's export of €89 billion ($99 billion) of goods, especially cars, to Britain each year. A survey, pre-referendum, by BDI, Germany's industry federation, found that nearly 70% of firms had no clue how to respond to Brexit. The boss of a big French defense firm says nobody, banks aside, made serious plans for it, beyond currency hedging.

All this uncertainty means that firms planning to invest in Britain are putting decisions on hold. A leading Swedish industrialist, Jacob Wallenberg, says he knows "companies that have withdrawn investment decisions from Britain since the referendum". Given the British economy's reliance on inflows from abroad, any slowdown is worrying: Britain holds roughly 7% of the world's stock of foreign direct investment, some £1 trillion, and more than anywhere except America. Around half of Britain's foreign direct investment comes from the EU.

Yet dramatic divestment may not loom. Instead the fear is of "slow erosion", says Juergen Maier, head of Siemens's British operations. "Lots of little decisions" may be made away from Britain, to build plants or run research projects elsewhere. He points to researchers and firms that could be excluded from the EU's €80 billion Horizon 2020 fund, which supports science and innovation.

Even if concerns over regulatory gaps prove overdone, there is a second worry: that future policy in the EU, drafted without direct British influence, will become more hostile to business. Mr Wallenberg calls Britain a free-market country and is concerned that new regulations will be dominated by a statist axis of Paris and Berlin. He is not alone. "Europe loses a sensible voice and a counterweight to the protectionists," says an executive at a German chemicals firm. Surprisingly, perhaps, the chairman of a French industrial company volunteers: "A lot of us don't like the idea of the Brits out. We like their business-friendly agenda."

A couple of days have gone by since a puffy-eyed David Cameron appeared outside 10 Downing Street and announced his resignation. The pound has tumbled. Investment decisions have been suspended; already firms talk of moving operations overseas. Britain's EU commissioner has resigned. Sensitive political acts—the Chilcot report's publication, decisions on a new London airport runway and the renewal of Britain's nuclear deterrent—are looming. European leaders are shuttling about the continent meeting and discussing what to do next. Those more sympathetic to Britain are looking for signs from London of how they can usefully influence discussions. In Briton mounting evidence suggests a spike in racist and xenophobic attacks on immigrants. Scotland is heading for another independence referendum. Northern Ireland's peace settlement may hang by a thread.

But at the top of British politics, a vacuum yawns wide. The phones are ringing, but no one is picking up.

This could go on for a while. The Conservative leadership contest will last until at least early October, perhaps longer. It may be almost as long until Labour has a new chief, and even then he or she may be a caretaker. The new prime minister could call a general election. It might be more than half a year until Britain has a leader capable of addressing the myriad crises now engulfing it.

The country does not have that kind of time. Despite arguments for patience from continental Anglophiles, including Angela Merkel, the insistence that Britain immediately invoke Article 50 of the Lisbon Treaty, launching exit negotiations that can last no longer than two years, is hardening. Soon it may be a consensus. Britain could be thrust into talks under a lame-duck leader with no clear notion of what Brexit should look like or mandate to negotiate - All against a background of intensifying economic turmoil and increasingly ugly divides on Britain's streets. The country is sailing into a storm. And no one is at the wheel.

The sheer political chaos in Britain means that there is even more reason to put investment plans on hold; Britain looks rudderless.

Analysts are also working out how the vote will affect specific sectors of the British economy. The real estate team of Jefferies, for example, has forecast that London office rents will fall 18% and some 10m square feet of demand for office space moves to Paris or Frankfurt (that is because banks will need to shift business to the EU to operate in euro transaction clearing or to have passporting rights in the EU). Russell Investments has said that pension funding levels will fall by 10% (lower asset prices and higher liabilities, as the bond yield falls); companies will need to divert cash from investment into their pension schemes.

The banks hoped—and believed—it wouldn't happen. But now the world's biggest banks must brace themselves for Britain's departure from the European Union. Today bankers will simply be trying to weather the turmoil after this Brexit vote. But in the weeks and months to come they will have to decide whether Brexit means shifting business and jobs away from Europe's financial capital London.

London is surely too big, and its allure too strong, for any big bank to quit altogether. As well as banking expertise, it has a host of auxiliary trades, such as accountancy and law. But Brexit may still mean a fracturing of Europe's financial industry. Shifting some business elsewhere will probably make sense. EU regulators may press banks to move people and capital across the Channel (or the Irish Sea). Deutsche Bank's boss, John Cryan, has said it "would be odd" to trade euros and EU government bonds in a branch outside the EU. Plenty think clearing euro transactions in London will become harder.

London is likely to lose some business to other, smaller financial centers, meaning Dublin and Luxembourg as well as Frankfurt and Paris. Economies of scale in Britain would be reduced, while other places would be too small to compensate. For the world's big banks, still trying to repair themselves eight years after the financial crisis and badgered by nagging regulators and impatient shareholders, the expense and disruption Brexit will inevitably bring is especially unwelcome. The Britons who voted for it will have little sympathy.

The political fallout from the vote will extend far beyond the issue of Mr Cameron's successor. This vote will reverberate for years. The economy will suffer, as will the political establishment.

Tech bosses fret that Britain and the EU will end up with different policies towards their most important resource: data. On July 12th the EU is expected, at last, to approve "Privacy Shield", an agreement to let companies transfer personal data across the Atlantic. (In October the European Court of Justice struck down an old deal as unsafe.) But since Britain has decided to leave the union, nobody knows whether the new shield will cover it, too. So might the EU block data flows across the Channel, unless Britain negotiates a privacy agreement of its own? Since some in Brussels are suspicious of intrusive British surveillance, that could prove messy.

Uncertainty leaves not just big cloud-computing firms such as Google unsure where to put data centers. After the Brexit vote, the U-word is muttered everywhere in boardrooms—from car making to airlines, energy to telecoms. Shareholders are already feeling the pain, although not all recent losses on stock markets are due to Britain's referendum.

The impact of the United Kingdom vote to withdraw from the European Union could have far-reaching consequences for international companies which will need to rethink their data management policies.

Whilst the UK is part of the EU it has the same data sovereignty laws as other countries in the EU. When the UK breaks away, those laws will change. Companies operating in Europe may have to manage one set of data privacy laws for the UK and another for EU-member countries. The issue will impact both cloud and managed service providers who may need to offer additional options for customers to host data across Europe, and enterprise end users who may need to reconsider where their data is stored in Europe.

With an increasing number of companies at risk from data breaches, compliance with data protection legislation is a growing issue. Companies with operations in the UK should ensure they are aware of the potential consequences for compliance, particularly with regard to the new EU General Data Protection Regulation (GDPR).

The UK is unlikely to implement legislation in line with the GDPR. Companies operating solely in the UK with UK customers, and storing data only in the UK, would therefore be unlikely to have to implement significant changes in their data protection processes. However, US companies also operating within the EU would still have to ensure compliance with the GDPR for the data of their EU customers.

Unless the UK harmonizes with the new EU rules, US & other nations companies may lose the ability to process European consumer data in the UK, unless they adopt policies suggested by the EU or approved by an EU data protection authority. This could impact companies that want to use data centers in the UK—even as backups if their data centers in other EU countries go down.

Regional cloud-computing businesses are particularly vulnerable to the complications of a split regulatory region. Cloud companies function more efficiently when they can easily shift loads from one data center to another. Restricting the types of data that can be stored in specific locations hampers that flexibility.

Although Britons' economy as per the very recent survey indication - is sinking as a result of the vote (Brexit) to leave the European Union - All one can do is to wait, watch

We are all in vibrational mode.- A Snip for Vox Populi

If you are in ratio with every breath you takeyou are alive and living.

You are vibrating because you are alive and living.

You are vibrating and it is the Law of the Universe.

Harmony between your inner self and your experience in the outer world is when you work closely with the mind in tandem with your thoughts. Often one feels discomfort when you are within a process of involvement towards fruition and you feel uncomfortable and not in harmony with what you are asking. This activity of discomfort would never have taken place if you were not offering a vibration that matched the reason for the uneasiness or the distress or the disquiet. If you were vibrating in all positivity towards what you were desiring then you would not be experiencing this negative experience. It is all in the opus grande feeling of a vibration. And vibrate you must and you are always in the motion of it whether you are active or at rest or in somnambulism, unlimited.

On Choosing the Right Speaker

In the letter 'Wasted Opportunity' by Gene Shaw (Secular Citizen, July 18), the writer has rightly stated that some of our speakers chosen by the church to debate on some contentious issues plaguing the church on TV channels, lack oratorical skills to put forward the views of the church in the correct perspective. A proper selection by church authorities is therefore necessary to ensure that the speaker besides bring 'au courant' on current topics and politics, is also well versed in church doctrine, canon law, various church encyclicals and findings of the synods. Besides issues like abortion, contraception, bigamy and homosexuality which are debated from time to time, there are more serious issues like the growing religious intolerance in the country and cases of attacks on priests and nuns, and the burning of churches, which the speaker should be able to put forward boldly and argue with facts and figures. Otherwise we will only be cutting a sorry figure as it has happened in the past. Very soon we will be called upon to debate on the contentious issue of 'Uniform Civil code' which, though welcomed by a section of the Catholic church doesn't find favour with some other churches. We need to present the correct views after reaching a consensus.

Don't Waste, Make Charity

People spend a lot of money in celebrating birthdays, weddings and anniversaries. But what they do not realise is that the same money they spend in inviting Tom, Dick and Harry can be spent in feeding the underprivileged children of our country. India is a poor country and we all know that. Eighty percent of the people living in India do not even get a morsel of food to eat. They have to rely on dustbins to pick up bits of food, most of them spoilt in order to fill their stomachs. I do not celebrate my birthday every year on March 21. I donate the same money to a charitable institution where the money is used for a good cause. I have told my daughter the same thing who is thinking of getting married soon. Instead of inviting guests who will eat, drink, make merry and then parcel the remaining food home, to donate the entire money, whatever it may be, to a charitable institution where the underprivileged children will at least have a smile on their faces and give you your blessings. I am praying that she do this good deed.

Catholics Come Home: EWTN

On July 12, 2016, ZENIT Staff and Media have announced that 'Catholics Come Home', the global TV channel of EWTN – Eternal Word Television Network, is to widen its reach, and make it available in Mandarin, Japanese, Korean and Arabic. At present its broadcasts its evangelical programs in the 9 Catholic languages of Europe. I suggest that it should also be serialized in Hindi and Malayalam.

Over the past 18 years, catholic-scomehome.org under the able guidance of Cardinals, Bishops and theologians, have invited millions of lapsed Catholics and break-away Christians to 'come home' to the Catholic Church founded by Jesus Christ!

'Pew' studies show that 80% of 'Millennial Catholics' (young adults, 18-34 years) abandon their Catholic faith before age 23. And more than 100,000 Americans stop practicing their faith annually, and only 1 out of 3 attend Church services.

"Numerous data reveal that American millennials are struggling with addictions, suicides, out-of-wedlock births, joblessness, and other significant life challenges", explained founder and president of EWTN, Dr. Tom Peterson. Its TV host of the highly popular serial, 'The Journey Home', Dr. Marcus Grodi, states: "Our hope is to reduce these disheartening statistics, and guide young adults towards healthier joy-filled lifestyles by introducing them to the Word of God, and reminding them of the rich traditions of the Fathers and Doctors of our Catholic faith!"

According to North American diocesan sources, more than a half a million souls are responding to the tele-invitations of EWTN! And if I may magnify: "Devoting themselves to the apostle's teachings, to the breaking of the Bread, and to prayer" (Acts 2:42).

An Appeal to the CBCI

I received my First Holy Communion one Sunday morning in 1955 when I was 7 years old. The same evening I received the sacrament of Confirmation. Today students in Mumbai and other parts of the country, receive Confirmation in class XI at about 16 years of age, after preparing for a year and half.

In the West, students generally receive confirmation between 7 and 16 years, with most countries favouring grade 8 (or 13 years). In the US and Canada it is around 13 while in Australia it is 12 years. The episcopal conference (bishops' conference) of a region/country decides the age. The US Conference of Catholic Bishops (USCCB) has decreed that the age of conferring the sacrament of Confirmation should be between the age of reason (assumed to be 7 years) and sixteen years. Hence in the US it is left to individual bishops to decide the age of confirmation between these limits, but again the preferred age is 13 years or grade 8.

On behalf of students and their parents in our country, I request the Catholic Bishops' Conference of India (CBCI) to consider a downward revision in the age of confirmation to 13 years or when the student is in class 8 instead of class XI.

Today, the competition among students to get maximum possible marks at the high school level is extremely fierce. They live life in a pressure-cooker situation starting from class IX. The competition is so fierce that even those securing 98% marks are not assured of a seat of choice in Delhi University. Every single mark counts. A downward revision in the age of confirmation will give Catholic students that little more time, which could make all the difference in their career/course options.

Besides, there are some compelling reasons for confirming early. Religious instructors can focus on 'formation' without having to worry about teenage issues of 16-year-olds ---a time when they are on the 'brink of adolescent rebelliousness'. Moreover parents can take on some of the burden of religious instructors by playing a bigger role in the formation of 13-year olds (at 16 it is difficult for parents).

On behalf of parents and students, I humbly request the CBCI to consider a downward revision in the age of confirmation to 13 years, a move that will benefit tens of thousands of students across the country, academically and even spiritually.

Baptist-turned-Catholic's testimony stirs massive crowd

by Fr. Adolf Washington

Bengaluru: “My wife is the first Catholic in her family in over 400 years. After we became Catholics, my wife Janet and I lost both of our families. They would not talk to us. We lost every friend we had in two weeks and we have found better friends now.”

A 3000-strong audience rained thunderous applause on July 24 as Baptist-turned-Catholic Stephen K. Ray shared his life story at a Catholic charismatic convention in Bengaluru, southern India. They came from across Bengaluru for the ‘Magnificat’ conference organized by the Divine Retreat Centre of the Vincentian Congregation.

Sharing his conviction that the Catholic Church and its hierarchy are established by God Himself and “to which all other denomination must be drawn to,” the 61-year-old said, “I like you to know that you are very blessed to have the Archbishop here because there’s lot would like to steal him away from you. He is a good man. You take care of him also keep your priests by frequenting the confession and seeking spiritual help from them for they are ordained by God to serve the Church”.

“How many of you would like to be up here speaking with the archbishop sitting right there in front of you?” he asked the crowds.

He was talking on the lines of the vast exodus of Catholics out of the church to the hundreds of neo-Christian groups popping up all over the city. He observed that some are small storefront operations while others are huge Assemblies of God churches with tens of thousands of members and many pastors own four homes and lives an opulent lifestyle.

Archbishop Bernard Moras set the tone of the conference in his homily saying, “The Gospel parable of the weeds and the wheat growing together throws light on the kind of world we live in today. We are constantly exposed to enemies of the Word of God who through the evil one sow seeds of destruction and discord in our hearts and minds. “Only when we are strongly founded on God’s Word, we will be able to stand united together against the schemes of the evil one”.

The prelate, who sat through the four-hour conference, also added “In this Year of Mercy, declared by the Holy Father, the parable also invites us to contemplate on God’s mercy like the farmer who waits patiently till he separates the weeds from the wheat”.

The gathering of priests, religious and laity, mindless of the dark clouds that threatened rain listened with rapt attention as Ray began. “You pray to Mary, We pray to God. You get to heaven by your Works and we get to heaven by Faith alone and we figured that Catholics have everything upside down and it was our job to get you all saved. And now look where I am.”

After the crowds burst into laughter and applause, he continued “I am standing up here to tell you why I love that tradition and I became a Catholic, and when I did, my wife and I never looked back.”

Ray and Janet were received into the Catholic Church with his whole immediate family on Pentecost Sunday, May 22, 1994. They live with their four children in Ann Arbor, Michigan.

Raised in a devout, loving Baptist family and whose father was a deacon and Bible teacher, Ray recounted how he himself was involved in the Baptist Church as a teacher of Biblical studies and lectured on a wide range of topics.

Tracing his path to conversion from scorn of the Catholic Church to embracing it with deep conviction he testified “Most of the time I start to cry in the Mass when I say ‘I believe in the One Holy Catholic Apostolic Church’ because I could never say that before. I love being Catholic. I also cry when I walk to the aisle to receive the body of Christ (Holy Communion). I used to make fun of and mock the Holy Eucharist. We (my wife and I) cried through the whole Mass during first six years.”

Adding a dash of humor, he said, “Becoming a Catholic has turned me into a big cry baby. It’s a good thing I think. I always wanted to have a tender heart to the Lord”.

Ray who visited The Holy Land at least a hundred times and read as many books on the Catholic Faith before making the “big decision” observed that only the Catholic Church has the Sacred altar where Christ stands in the person of the Priest while other denominations have only the pulpit.

Commenting on the mushrooming of ‘house churches’ and splinter Christian groups in the city and also such ‘Church pastors’ across the world indulging in money dealings he asked “Why do want to steal members from the Catholic Church? Can they bring people from other religions to Christ and form a Church like the Catholic Church?”

Heaping praise on the congregation gathered under a huge tent, Steve said “I always hear people say Catholics can’t sing only Protestants can sing. You proved them wrong to me”. He applauded the Faith of Catholics here as “devout Indian Christians come to praise Jesus, celebrate the Mass and hear a talk to be inspired to become better Christians.”

Joseph Aloysius Kanthraj, a participant and organizing team member, told Matters India “Steve’s testimony of conversion makes me feel proud and empowered to be a Catholic. His exhortation to be deep-rooted in the Word of God, obedient to authorities in the Church who are our Shepherds and to realize that the Catholic Church is the first to give us the Bible makes me feel strengthened in my love for the Catholic Church. I am sure this is everybody’s experience today...”

Ray spends time researching, writing, and teaching about the Catholic Faith across the world.

Just A Moment?

The suave Prime Minister (PM) had been elected with a thumping majority. There was a gala dinner to celebrate his success. The PM's Aide-de-Camp (ADC) was an even more dashing Captain, from the elite Brigade of Guards. The ADC was recently married, and his young wife was also at the dinner. She was an absolute stunner, in a tantalizingly draped maroon and gold sari. When she turned around the PM couldn't help but notice that there was just a small knot holding her blouse in place. It revealed a perfectly contoured back, as smooth as lucent Italian marble.

by chhotebhai *

He flew into a violent rage. His carefully crafted image would be shattered. How great would be his fall, with the Opposition baying for his blood. In crisis, his scheming brain was at its best. He recalled his ADC from the front, on the pretext of enquiring about the progress there. Without an inkling of what had transpired, the brave Captain met his PM. The latter then told him that he could take a week's leave and spend time with his newly wed wife. The PM could then always say that the pregnancy could be attributed to the Captain's visit.

A wave of lust overwhelmed the PM. As a powerful go-getter he was used to getting whatsoever he desired. He had a shrewd scheming brain that most people mistook for that of a born achiever. He would get what he wanted. So he conspired to have his ADC packed off to where a fierce battle was raging with a hostile neighbour. He then invited the woman to his personal digs, spiked her drink and repeatedly raped her. The hapless woman had nowhere to go or no one to turn to. In any case nobody would believe her. Then she discovered that she was pregnant; and dared to convey this message to the PM.

But the best-laid plans go awry. The Captain was a third generation officer, a man of honour. He told his boss that he could not go home and sleep with his wife while his comrades were facing hostile fire and even more hostile weather conditions. He returned to his unit at the front.

The schemer was not one to take things lying down (no pun intended). He sent for his confidante in the Military Intelligence, and told him to ensure that the captain was deployed in the first line of engagement, and killed. The "encounter" was successful. But things went horribly wrong again for the PM.

When he went to condole the martyr's widow, shedding copious crocodile tears, she could not control herself anymore. Pointing an accusing finger at her tormentor, she screamed out that it was the PM who had got her husband killed in order to fulfill his own blood lust, and to cover up his crime. The nation was stunned.

The PM was tried under the following sections of the Indian Penal Code (IPC) – 299 for culpable homicide, with the intent to kill; and 376 (b)(2) for rape by a public servant who takes advantage of his official position to rape a woman in his custody. As per provisions of Sections 302 and 376 of the IPC the crime was punishable by death or life sentence, together with 10 years rigorous imprisonment. The die was cast.

The PM's well-oiled Public Relations department now got into the act. As did his highly paid battery of defence lawyers. They argued that the PM was a good man; the beloved of the nation, and what happened was just a momentary lapse. The judge took a lenient view and let off the accused with a very light sentence.

Does this string of events sound surreal or bizarre? It isn't. This happened about 3000 years ago. If you have your Bible near you turn to 2 Samuel 11:1-27. It is the story of King David, and how he got his officer, Uriah the Hittite, killed; because he had already impregnated his wife Bathsheba! Do read the chapter for the gory details that are no different from my modern day juxtaposition. David was also unrepentant. When the prophet Nathan confronted him with his sin David flew into a self-righteous rage (cf 2 Sam 12:1-15). Through Nathan this is what God conveyed to David. "Your household will never be free of the sword, since you showed contempt for me, and took the wife of Uriah the Hittite, to make her your wife" (2 Sam 12:10). "Out of your own household I shall raise misfortune for you" (2 Sam 12:11), and "You have worked in secret but I shall work this for all Israel to see, in broad daylight” (2 Sam 12:12). The anticlimax, as with the PM, was the light “punishment” with which David got away – the death of his child a few days after it was born. The sin of the father was vested in the son. I find this a big let down.

In fact I find this behaviour of David obnoxious and dastardly. Unfortunately, in the genealogy of Jesus, he is referred to as the progeny of David, who had taken Uriah’s wife (cf Mat 1:6). Two blind men seeking healing call out to Jesus as the son of David (cf Mat 9:27). On his triumphant entry into Jerusalem on Palm Sunday he is again greeted with the salutation “Hosanna to the son of David” (Mat 21:9). Even in the contemporary Marian litany the term “Tower of David” is used. Pardon me for saying that I find such epithets disgusting.

When I went on pilgrimage to the Holy Land in 1980 I saw the Tomb of David. After the destruction of Solomon’s Temple this tomb is now venerated as the most sacred place for the Jews. The Star of David is also the national emblem of modern day Israel. Each unto their own, but don’t count me among them. I fail to understand why David is exalted the way he is by the Jews, Christians and Muslims. The last use the Arabic equivalent – Dawood.

For us in India the most notorious Dawood is Dawood Ibrahim. Here again the second name is what we have anglicized to Abraham. This is another shocker. On two occasions Abraham gave his wife Sarah to powerful men, in order to curry favour with them. His scheming mind passed her off as his “sister”, because she was very beautiful, and had he said that she was his wife, he would have been eliminated, so that they could take his wife!

The first instance is with Pharaoh in Egypt (cf Gen 12:10-20). Abraham repeats the ploy with Abimelech, the king of Gerar, in the Negev desert in modern day Gaza (cf Gen 20:1-3). In both instances Abraham is caught out and severely reprimanded. Yet we call Abraham a paragon of virtue and the father of the faith. I just don’t buy this stuff.

Perhaps Abraham told God that this was a “momentary” lapse of judgment, even though he had repeated the mistake. David may also have pleaded with Nathan that it was just a moment of passion. Surely the PM’s smart Alec defence lawyers would also have used a similar line of defence. Perhaps Bill Clinton used the same ploy in the Monika Lewenski episode. In some countries “temporary insanity” is used as a ploy to minimize culpability. Recently Dr Zakir Naik’s defenders stated on TV that what he had said on TV might have been said in the heat of the moment. On another TV show a woman’s activist against rape unequivocally stated that rape does not happen in a moment.

These “momentary lapses” take me back about 40 years, when I met a venerable Maltese Capuchin priest at the shrine of St Jude, Jhansi. Having heard of my “conversion” he said to me, “Do not lose in a moment of darkness what you found in a moment of light”. When I repeated this pearl of wisdom to my mentor, Fr Deena-bandhu, another Capuchin, he rubbished it saying, “Nothing happens in a moment”. Everything, whether good or bad, is a gradual build up. Rape, murder, divorce – nothing happens in a moment. We would do well to recognize the symptoms, and also avoid the circumstances, before it is too late.

Before I conclude, a small digression. According to exegetes, the Hittites were an Indo-European race that settled in Asia Minor (modern day Turkey) circa 2000 BC. If Uriah was a Hittite, then in all probability, so was his wife Bathsheba. And if Jesus’ ancestry is traced to Bathsheba, then he has Indian blood in him, because Mary was also from the same house of David!

So our current PM, who excels in intrigue, double speak and rewriting history, could verily claim that Jesus is an Indian! I leave you with this precious moment of discovery! What a moment.

Chase your passion and become successful

We are all unique and special in one way or another. You have special talents that other's don't have. We need to find out what they are and capitalize on it. Find your passion and happiness will follow. There're people out there right know not exercising they're gifts working in jobs they hate. Sometimes we accept jobs only for the money. You need to find what your passion is. If it feels more like a hobby then you're on the right track. Here are five reasons to follow your passion.

Feels Good – Doing something you love makes you feel better about yourself. It doesn't cause much stress compared to something you dislike. You're more optimistic and more positive when making a decision. Any accomplishment feels like a million bucks.

Success – You have a better chance of becoming successful and making a difference in the world. You have the power to help others and do good. It becomes much harder to become successful when there's no passion involved.

Harder to quit – You work harder and are more determined to complete any task. Your passion wakes you up and not the alarm clock. When you need an alarm clock to wake you up that's your signal to quit what your doing and find your passion. Passion produces more energy and stamina which equals to being more productive. Passion motivates you through the stumbles, bumps, and failures that come with your journey. When there's passion involved you work harder and stay longer after hours. Quitting is not an option. So success is inevitable, it's going to happen.

Helps You Grow – Your passion helps you create new ideas and strategies towards your goal. It helps you become more likely to absorb and dissect information towards your task. You start becoming more discipline with your habits. Time starts becoming important and valuable to your dream.

Time – You need to follow your passion before you run out of time. Unfortunately, we all have expiration dates. Money comes and goes but your story will live forever. You have incredible potential hidden inside of you, it's time to use it. It's never too late to start. Remember time is the only thing we can't borrow.

Indian bureaucracy has its own style of working and is said to be one of the most corrupt country. Many intelligent brains go abroad to pursue science or business to earn more with honest deeds. India is still not capable of producing world level scientists. Human resources department and Indian scientific labs are captured by 'Yes Sir' people and not by merit but on the basis of political affiliations. Indian scientists are not capable of producing innovative research papers to have recognition as world level scientists. Indian science world, construction units and medical are using western scientific methods but they still follow superstitions and are engulfed with 'jyotish' and 'bhoot-pret' problems.

Doctors, engineers, science students and even scientists are not behaving like learned persons of scientific knowledge but they are commercial and wish to earn more and more and ignore scientific norms in daily life. They are interested to get administrative posts to earn more money by taking bribes. They are ready to pay huge money for prime earning postings. Few are caught in raids, conducted by investigating agencies.

Educational and medical are totally professionalism of commercial earning. High profit rate on medicines, unwanted costly tests and inflated medical bills, donations in post graduate and professional courses are the factors making rich people more rich and the poor on the edge of extinction. Professor Yashpal is one exception otherwise youngsters follow short routes to become rich. There are also people like Sachin Tendulkar who ignored studies still became rich and famous but he mastered his only skill and passion – cricket. This proves that even if you are not good at studies but master in any of the world's skill set then you are bound to become rich and famous. But most of the people who are in academics do not go for research. Everyone wants short out of becoming doctor, engineer and so on. Indian education system and scientific studies are in great danger, highly polluted controlled by unqualified persons.

Beware Of What You Eat!

You have probably heard of smart foods that boost your IQ but did you know that some unhealthy options can drain your brain? A high-fat diet of curries, chips and so on can weaken your brain functioning

Researchers have found that there are certain foods that make you less smart. It turns out that 'eating dumb' reduces all of your efforts to be smart. Eating poorly affects your alertness, memory, mood and your nervous system, such as your neuro-muscular response time. Here's about the foods that you must avoid

Sugar

The idea that eating too much sugar is bad for you isn't anything new, but eating a lot of sugar over an extended period of time causes neurological problems. High consumption of sugar affects your memory and your ability to learn. Also, too much sugar in your blood slows down your brain cells' use of insulin to break down sugar to aid in processing thoughts and emotions, leading to a decrease in brain activity. This information is daunting because the average American consumes 47 pounds of sugar annually. You should try to limit your sugar intake, including high-fructose corn syrup and high-carb foods.

Salt

Aside from affecting your heart rate and blood pressure, salt affects your cognitive functioning. Adding raw salt to your food is worse than cooking it with salt. Not only does salt impair your ability to think, but it also causes many other problems such as cardiovascular disease, cancer and stroke. Try to consume salt in moderation.

Artificial Sweeteners

Artificial sweeteners drain your brain power. Consuming too many artificial sweeteners slows your brain response, effectively making you dumber. Items that contain artificial sweeteners, other than packet food, include mouthwash, toothpaste, cough syrup and chewable vitamins. Also, consuming high quantities of artificial sweeteners for an extended period of time causes brain damage.

Junk Food

Potato chips, soda, burgers and fries. It all sounds so tasty, but junk food is addictive, and addiction is a matter of the brain. It turns out that the cessation of eating junk food triggers symptoms similar to withdrawal, depression and anxiety. The fats in junk food impart the creation of dopamine in the brain. Dopamine plays a role in giving you an overall feeling of well-being, learning, alertness, memory, cognitive function and motivation. When everyone told you not to eat junk food or it will rot your brain when you were a kid, it turns out they weren't kidding. In fact, consuming high amounts of junk food for an extended period of time can lead to memory loss, and in some cases, Alzheimer's disease.

Fried Food

Fried food is kind of implied under junk food. However, there are still healthy foods that, when fried, become unhealthy. Stay smart by opting for non-fried foods.

Trans Fats

Researchers who conducted the Oregon Brain Aging Study found that the consumption of trans fats is linked to brain shrinkage. The study examined 104 adult over the age of 65 and tested the subjects for the consumption of 30 nutrients over time. The findings show that those with high trans fat diets had brain shrinkage similar to people who have Alzheimer's Disease.

Precooked and processed foods

Precooked and processed foods contain harmful chemicals that make you dumber. Preservatives, additives, dyes and artificial flavors are some examples of the chemicals in these foods that affect your behavior and cognitive functioning. Consuming large quantities of processed foods over a lifetime slowly destroys your nerve cells and causes your brain to shrink.

Nicotine

Having nicotine in your bloodstream causes the capillaries between your blood vessels to constrict, which affects the function of neurotransmitters and, ultimately, brain function. The cessation of nicotine intake causes a brain fog, and this causes nicotine users to develop dependency.

Small changes can make a big difference to your health

Healthy eating is not about strict dietary limitations, staying unrealistically thin, or depriving yourself of the foods you love. Rather, it's about feeling great, having more energy, improving your outlook, and stabilizing your mood. It's easier than you think to start eating healthy! Take small steps each week to improve your nutrition and move toward a healthier you.

Foods you should avoid

- Flavoured yogurt
- Canned soup
- Cola
- White bread
- Iced coffee
- Soy sauce
- Doritos
- Sports drinks
- Coffee creamer
- Pop-tarts and breakfast pastries

Gospel Of Love Can Bear Fruit

Love matters. It matters in the tireless growth of happiness, peace and development of the world: love is a definitive word from the moment life is conceived in the womb, through all stages of a child's progression into adulthood and finally old age.

Love bears fruit: in union with another human being, in relationships of trust, sharing, caring and sacrifice. Ultimately it enriches life values. Love can meet challenges in society without pain and complain. The word of the Lord is of the highest priority for Christians when Jesus said, "I say to you, love your enemies and pray for those who persecute you". (Mat.5:44). Jesus went on to add, "You shall love your neighbor as yourself" (Mat.19:19).

Category of love: The Fruits of the Gospel is graced by love. There is the love of parents for their children. The love of family life. The love found in friendship, companions and associates. The love of brother and sister. The love of husband and wife. In Mark's Gospel we are told, "You shall love the Lord your God."(Mk.12:30).

For all its intensity the power of love can be placed in simple divisions, focusing mainly on the species of humanity. In this context we have Spiritual Love (for God, the Virgin Mary, the Angels and Saints, Devotions, the Liturgy and more). Physical Love (as in procreation). And Material Love (a desire for Wealth, Property, Possessions).

The first-ever love gifted to the world came from Almighty God, "For God so loved the world that he gave his only Son, so that everyone who believes in Him may not perish but may have eternal life." (Jn.3:16).

Eve, the first woman, loved Adam, and offered him to share the forbidden apple with her. The Book of Ruth tells us the love story of Ruth and Boas. The story of Isaac and Rebecca (Gen.24) is a tender love affair.

The apostle Luke in his Gospel records what Jesus said, "For even sinners love those who love them." (Lk.6:32). Love is mysterious. It cannot be explained on the blackboard. Yet, Love reaches out to everyone; in war, peace, misunderstanding, mercy and forgiveness.

BY MELVYN BROWN

Love is forever. There is always a powerful argument to support its warmth and reaction to straighten things out. Love remains silent, often passive, but direct and impressive.

"I don't lie," she said, "I love you".

"My love is undying and true." He replied.

"Would you die for me?" she asked.

He stood motionless, mystified and derailed.

This reminds us of what Jesus once said: "No one has greater love than this, to lay down one's life for one's friends". (Jn.15:13).

A scrawled message is to always confront the truth and love will bloom. There is surely no "greater love" as shown in the true story of St. Maximilian Kolbe, a Catholic priest who offered his life to save a condemned man from the gas-chamber.

Love is God's gift; make your love a gift to God.

Have you heard of Platonic Love? The origin of this expression comes from the Greek philosopher Plato. The teacher and thinker had a lady friend and they loved each other intimately and with much affection, but not with any form of sexual motive. It was a closeness like that of brother-sister. In time their togetherness was known as a 'Platonic Love'.

When teenagers imagine they're in love most people say it's Puppy Love and not to be taken seriously. This is a crisis most young lovers confront. Youth have the power to face the challenges and gravity of 'first love' often when there is a break-up they say, "there are many pebbles along the beach and many fools within reach" and move on.

Unrequited love can charter a course of disturbing events in desperation. If one's love is not returned turn to prayer, it helps.

To love and be loved is a fundamental right.

It does not always work that way. In most romances love very often becomes a one-way ticket when the opposite partner is not ready for commitment.

Jesus is the true vine. Reminiscent of his many enlightening parables and teachings, the Lord had openly said, "As the Father has loved me, so I have loved you; abide in my love". (Jn.15:9).

Today, in the midst of atrocities around the world the need for love, mercy and forgiveness is possible only if love prevails, even when innocent children die and humanity is slaughtered: love for the enemy will surely overcome evil.

"But I say to you that listen, love your enemies do good to those who hate you". (Lk.6:27).

You are a creation of God's love; make your love a gift to God.

The platinum report

I am a member of a few apex Chambers of Trade, Commerce and Industry in Mumbai and have met some of the most versatile and enigmatic business denizens in their field of specialties. From mining to information technology. From pharma to hospitality and event management. Most of them as millionaires and a large bouquet of some multi millionaires with a special mention of a few astute billionaires with the 'armani tag and 'vertu branded mobile in a crocodile pouch. And seeing them face to face with their 'christian dior eyewear I look for what sets them apart from the less well off. Do they all share a common belief for them to be what they are or do they improvise life to give accent to their desires of being prosperous by something so special that others only see the dense forest instead of the trees that make up what the forest is. Are these the guys who are the risk takers....? Were not they born like others in the crowd who now hold them in high esteem. Were there parents Maharajas of places like pataudi or were they not from the same family that lived on the periphery of the mahim railway shed and used the virar fast train track for their morning ablutions. Tell me another story about

by Rtn. Calwyn

these honchos and I will tell you another plausible lie, permissible, but yet a lie.

What sets them apart is they are well off today, businesswise and we see them as result oriented and risk takers and men and women with finite minds that continue expanding their areas of involvement inside and outside national and international geographies. Who are we to grade their personal responsibilities but then human candor tinted with the colors of jealousy expresses well as we define their personal platform and often make this gentry succumb to our human phenomena of gossip. We often make them, these business tycoonsor we break them. The decision is ours. But that is not what the content of this discussion is meant to be.

The system these opulent faces showcase is belief. Belief in the character of their enterprises.

In some cases they arrange the system to mirror continuously that the rich get richer and the poor get broke and live uneven lives in their business undertakings and the corresponding effects create a disbandment in their family lives. Have they been kind enough to teach you through their affiliation with you that there is a fundamental belief that strikes the chord of being accurate to the point that you cross over to that position which brings in the confidence of faith in the making of the amalgam towards success. Will they identify for you the pathway towards becoming the upscale business man from the middleclass of stress and struggle. Are they going to teach you how to believe or is this invite so difficult as if to be commissioned only to the chosen few. Will they furnish you with the ratio meant to prop you far up the economic scale. Will they invite you to see the world through the eyes of the wealthy business men they assume to be. Though, they are aware that in each and every one of you there is a wealth switch buried in your brain that you can flip on and 'shazzam' as in the superman comic books create this hypnotic sound of defiance and power to fashion the business hero in you with the hope that the effect stays till you are in the superman attire.

You are not alone, brother business man. There is an audience out there waiting restlessly to contain the exuberance of the guy with the armani suit who walks the talk.

Oh, what a feeling to set your mind in rampage mode as you try your best to get these of a kind to share their secrets with you about the true nature of the world of wealth and the familiar pose of the extremely wealthy. Will they not share their thoughts with regular people... the medium and small businessman. If you are a viewer of business channels on tv and you come across some of the award program or a mastermind event you will notice that between the anchor and the respondent on the dais there is only idle chat and the fracas of the industry put to a preface rather than a foreword. So, you see, it is not your fault for not getting to know what it takes to make a billion bucks this side of the Suez.

The fault also lies with you. You as a businessman is often reluctant to break free of the limits of your thinking and corresponding to your income thereby. You are such imbeciles of mother nature that you only think in terms of scarcity and limitations. You are of the opinion that half is better than full and the water pouch is very often leaking from underneath.... because you are in tandem with the thought that anything could happen to put you on the streets of perdition in case you fail. Where is your risk taking quotient, then.....? You are devoid of the word opportunities, unlimited. Who are these bandicoots who have imbibed into you the rudiments of small thinking and restrictive thoughts. Castrate these men with out an iron mask and send them to the gallows.

Are you aware that, the richest of the rich are doing better than ever at this time of this media driven world and it's business reports when Brexit is taboo and the Pound is at a high time low and the successful never even think about scarcity... Are you aware that there are more underwriters at work distributing non disclosure agreements and letters of intent than that what was present in January this year. Do you know the number of IPOs lined up on Nasdaq and London Stock Exchange than in the first quarter of this year. Do know. Do you really, know. And you want to emulate the guy in the 'armani with the 'christian dior'

For all these hep business guys with a dozen plastic cards that work better outside the country there are no limits. Chutzpah, they have. What is that... as it sounds more like a hinterland vile word and extremely unpleasant. And Chutzpah they will live by come hell or high water. And Chutzpah is so simply yet an admirable connotation for being self confident and stepping on the peddle with audacity. Take all their money away if you want, they'll make it all back and more because they see opportunity where others don't... whilst they see the trees in the forest and you stupidly focus on the forest.

Actually, you are in a mess till you reach the freedom that these who you admire bask in in their 'let us get some sun' game. But , within this mess is an enormous opportunity without an agenda that will tempt to discourage you. It is up to you to attract the abundance you are wanting. But as junglified as we see ourselves so often we will always be trapped within the periphery of being in oblivion as you blame the economy and how crazy the numbers are and the illusion which spells for limitation. Just by recognizing that the resources are limited you form your decisive factor and panic . You spend erroneously and believe that savings will be an aftermath of success because of the profits accumulated.

Are you missing the true opportunities of wealth. Is your thinking right. Are you In sound mind. Is your body healthy enough to discuss the tantrum of the market forces you subjugate yourself to.

Be attentive now as the content legend tries to find an answer to the propositions made earlier.

It is the matrix of business which is thought to deliver a solution to the problems faced or the desire to equate ones self with success and how best to copy the business models of the successful. Your fright and the fear application is the factor to delve on.It is necessary to by pass this critical factor in your mind and to consciously become aware of this phenomena which is to make the shift to an abundance mindset. Otherwise, all is madness and mayhem.

And to encourage the legend and it's disposition towards finding a way to eliminate debt , generate a massive income and reverse any scarcity mindset becomes the order of the day. In reality to become wealthy in the shortest possible time within the scope of an overnight miracle, as if.

And as we perambulate into the halls of the rune and the unknown we see some very extra ordinary values to learn about and their presence to be made available. We must learn how to discover how easy it is to focus on the really important things in life and whether we can arrest these propositions to enter into a collaboration with our businesses so that we can attract those things needed for our trade and commerce involvement on the platform given for it's execution. For this we need the per chance but yet so invisible clarity in mindset and the focus of a marksman.

Encourage yourself to live in the here and now of all things and within the dimension of your conscious mind where fear is the lowest point and is a referral to nothing but an obligation to know that it exists. If transformation in mind is what is needed then this is the biggest opportunity. Discover how easy it is to focus on the really important things in life, and attract those things in abundance.

Discover how easy it is to focus on the metamorphosis and really important things in life, and attract those things in abundance as you can attract anything when your mindset is clear and focused...as you unravel a series of prosperous adventures and prod on regardless of the consequences when you begin to take a risk . You will automatically tap into wealth habits of those you admire and effortless will be your experience as you grow your wealth daily.

So with these exercises scrambled within the content given , you have achieved the distinction of now being able to avoid scarcity and the mindset that approved the conundrum. Your success is so deep and profound it will emanate as if you were always born a rich businessman as the shift in the mind set is in full ratio with your desire and faith to allow for it's presence in your life.

Unlock the millionaire mindset and imagine always the feeling of success without the impediment of barbed wire. And finally be free to strut on the red carpet, to showcase yourself as the businessman of the year and walk the talk as if..... the world is at your command.Actually, you as a businessman was born for greater things. ' Modernize Indian Politics '

With reference to MR IGNATIUS DABHI's article titled : Modi's Jumbo Cabinet: 24 out of 78 " Criminals " ?! in THE SECULAR CITIZEN dated MONDAY, 25 JULY 2016 politics is a dirty game and Indian politics is extremely filthy but since it is concerned with the country's leadership it has to be cleaned up and modernized.

People get the leaders they deserve but political parties must be prevented by law from making people with criminal backgrounds, corrupt people commmunalfanatics, linguistic fanatics and regional fanatics members of their party.

Through a process of brainstorming, admitting leaders specialized in different professions and party elections held regularly new leaders can be encouraged to run their parties efficiently thus creating a good second line leadership.

In elected bodies like parliament and the state and union territory legislatures the leader of the political party that has won the election must be elected by all the members of the house cutting across political barriers and it much better if the prime minister, deputy prime minister chief minister, deputy chief minister are elected directly by the people for only two four year terms and undergo a phsytriac examination/check up before taking office.

A joint leader of a unified secular opposition must also be elected in the elected bodies like parliament and the state and union territory legislatures and a shadow cabinet must be formed and situations warrant ie in times of crisis an opposition no-trust vote must be held.

Another solution is for people to elect leaders during elections by nominating and electing leaders including the prime-minister, deputy prime minister, chief minister and deputy chief minister on the spot.

The term of the president and vice-president must also be reduced from five years to four years and they must be allowed to serve only two four year terms and for them too a psychiatric examination/check up must be compulsory and in their case electing a consensus candidate must not be allowed as it is undemocratic.

The concept of partyless democracy is undemocratic and must not be adopted for governing India.

Just like we in Maharastra have a graduate and teacher constituency where graduates and teachers can elect a leader of their choice to the upper house of their legislature the same must be done in other states and union territories and at the centre ie parliament.

Other things that can help are drastically reducing the perks of all our leaders so that they can lead simple lives and recalling corrupt and inefficient leaders and preventing them from standing in any future elections and despite the opposition disliking the ruling political they must bconvert their bad points into good points and adopt whatever good points the ruling party possesses

Thus a cultural revolution is necessary to ensure that we get good and efficient leaders and if this is not done a revolution is inevitable to help set things right so our leaders must remember at all times that they are servants of the people and not masters of the people.

Thus where there is a will there is a way and Indian politics must be modernized by constantly creative ideas to ensure that our country progresses and goes forward and does not disgress or go backwards.

Inspiration!

Take a closer look at your personality

Your choice of colour, dish, movie or animal tells you a lot about yourself, how you function and how others see you. It is the means to understanding your behaviour and your character traits as well as your physical, mental, emotional and spiritual states. It reflects the way you operate in the world, your strengths and weaknesses, your vulnerabilities, your deepest needs and your challenges at that time in your life

Many a times, you are so curious to know about the world outside that you often tend to neglect the complex world that lies inside you. How many times have you really attempted to understand your inner self? Well, if you haven't done so in the past, here's your chance to understand your true self by analysing the things that are an inseparable part of your life. Mentioned below is a list of few things that reveal your personality

Movies

The kind of movies that you watch can also tell what kind of a person you are. If you are a die-hard rom-com movie fan, it means you are a romantic person and have a laid-back attitude towards life. Your preference for adventurous or horror movies denotes that you are an adventurous person who craves for thrilling experiences. Sci-fi movies are watched by brainy people who like their movies to offer some food for thought.

Cell phone

Take a close look at the phone you use. If it is more on the stylish side, you're a person who cares a lot about fashion trends. If it is a simple phone, only serving basic purposes like calling and texting messages, it shows that you're someone who lives life on her own terms. You don't care a damn about the latest trends. If you use a cellphone with a qwerty keypad, it shows that you are a friendly person. A cellphone with a great camera is usually used by a person who loves to cherish memories.

Food

Your favorite dish also has something to say about you. If you love Mexican food, it connotes that you like to lead a simple life, travel to historical places and explore them. People who usually prefer Chinese cuisine are quite patient and easy-going. Pastries are usually chosen by those who are very imaginative and artistic in their life. People who love ice creams often possess childlike innocence, enthusiasm and charisma. They believe in living life to the fullest. Pizzas are liked by people who are social and extroverted.

Work desk

If you have an unpersonalized or untidy desk at work, it implies that you don't plan to work there for long. On the contrary, if you look after your desk, decorate it with plants or pictures, it means you are treating it like a private possession and plan to stick to the workplace for long. Family photos kept on the desk represent an emotional person

Car

Your favorite car also speaks about your personality. A Beetle represents someone who is delicate and feminine. A studious and observant person usually prefers a BMW 7 series. A Hybrid symbolizes a sophisticated, classy and intelligent person.

Shoe

Your shoes also give a hint about your taste. Sneakers are usually preferred by someone who is energetic, perky and vivacious, while ballet shoes go for the delicate and feminine ones. Brogues are for a square-toed Victorian, while slippers go for someone who is more on the easy-going and casual side. Your favorite stilettos say that you are beautiful.

Animal

Birds are usually loved by a person who is an observer and a dreamer. Fishes are favorite beings of laid-back and introvert people. Dogs are loved by those who are amiable and outgoing, while cats are preferred by those who are lazy and selfish. Lions are admired by those who like to dominate and enjoy power. A mouse is liked by someone who is dominated by others and finds it hard to stand up for herself.

Colour

Out of all those different colors in the color palette, simply pick your favorite one. It can tell what kind of a person you are. If you prefer bright colors like red and yellow, it means you are an extroverted, friendly and romantic person. Colors like lavender, pink and white represent a shy, feminine and dreamy person.

Things you can tell just by looking at someone

- Using her right arm to cradle a baby might mean she's depressed.
- If a person loves chocolates he or she is probably nicer.
- If he looks like a bully (authoritarian), he's probably a team player.
- People with symmetrical faces tend to be rich and asymmetrical faces tend to be leaders.
